According to Schermerhorn's artist statement about the work, the art is, "a meditation on the Texas landscape."

"I think visitors will appreciate the amount of detail and labor that Maggie puts into these landscapes," Wiedner said. "They feature 2D and 3D elements that allow the landscapes to come to life." "My art is about hope and growth, from the past and the present of my surroundings," Schermerhorn's artist statement said. 98 Percent of Websites Worldwide Are Not Accessible & Why Website Accessibility Matters in 2023!

Inaccessible web content means that people with disabilities are denied equal access to information. An inaccessible website can exclude people just as much as steps at an entrance to a physical location. Ensuring web accessibility for people with disabilities is a priority for the Department of Justice. In recent years, a multitude of services have moved online and people rely on websites like never before for all aspects of daily living. For example, accessing voting information, finding up-to-date health and safety resources, making appointments for health or business purposes, or even ordering a pizza for dinner. We have come accustomed to doing more and more online.

People with disabilities navigate the web in a variety of ways. People who are blind may use screen readers, which are devices that speak the text that appears on a screen. People who are deaf or hard of hearing may use captioning. And people whose disabilities affect their ability to grasp and use a mouse may use voice recognition software to control their computers and other devices with verbal commands.

The ways that websites are designed and set up can create unnecessary barriers that make it difficult or impossible for people with disabilities to use websites, just as physical barriers like steps can prevent some people with disabilities from entering a building. But these barriers can be prevented or removed so that websites are accessible to people with disabilities.

Examples of Website Accessibility Barriers

- Poor color contrast. People with limited vision or color blindness cannot read text if there is not enough contrast between the text and background (for example, light gray text on a light-colored background).
- Use of color alone to give information. People who are color-blind may not have access to information when that information is conveyed using only color cues because they cannot distinguish certain colors from others. Also, screen readers do not tell the user the color of text on a screen, so a person who is blind would not be able to know that color is meant to convey certain information (for example, using red text alone to show which fields are required on a form).
- Lack of text alternatives (“alt text”) on images. People who are blind will not be able to understand the content and purpose of images, such as pictures, illustrations, and charts, when no text alternative is provided. Text alternatives convey the purpose of an image, including pictures, illustrations, charts, etc.
- No captions on videos. People with hearing disabilities may not be able to understand information communicated in a video if the video does not have captions.
- Inaccessible online forms. People with disabilities may not be able to fill out, understand, and accurately submit forms without things like:
 - Labels that screen readers can convey to their users (such as text that reads “credit card number” where that number should be entered);
 - Clear instructions; and
 - Error indicators (such as alerts telling the user a form field is missing or incorrect).

Mouse-only navigation (lack of keyboard navigation). People with disabilities who cannot use a mouse or trackpad will not be able to access web content if they cannot navigate a website using a keyboard.

When the ADA Requires Web Content to be Accessible

The Americans with Disabilities Act applies to state and local governments (Title II) and businesses that are open to the public (Title III). According to ADA Title III, every business website has to be accessible to people with disabilities, or it will be at risk of being sued and facing unnecessary legal expenses. Since 2019, we have worked with many local businesses who have faced lawsuits by not being compliant. These suits have targeted businesses in our area and have ranged in cost from $10,000 to $75,000 for non-compliance violations. Industries we have seen being targeted have been pharmacies, attorneys, schools, housing authorities, insurance companies, mortgage and financial advisors.

What We Offer:

We can help protect your business by installing a small bit of code on your existing website. This code will use AI technology to make sure your website has the following:

- ADA, WCAG 2.1 Level AA & Section 508 compliance for your website.
- An accessibility statement and certification of performance.
- Provide ongoing maintenance involving a re-scan of your website every 24 hours. If there is a new ADA requirement your site will be in full compliance in hours.

A one year plan starts at $460.00 a year or if you prefer to pay monthly $45 a month

Not only does this protect your brand but it also mitigates the legal risk of expensive lawsuits and extends your business reach. We can protect your business and provide a piece of mind for those who may visit your site.

If you wish to read more about these guidelines or find out how a pizza started the ADA accessibility click the links below.

FIVE GROUP BENEFITS EMPLOYEES WILL LOOK FOR IN 2023

Most small businesses are at a competitive disadvantage when trying to hire and retain employees compared to their larger firm counterparts. The smaller firms are typically more limited in their budgetary capabilities and unable to provide a high level of comprehensive benefit package. To attract their necessary workers, the focus for owners of small companies should be directed toward benefits that are most valued by the workforce they are looking to attract. Here are a few of the benefits most employees are looking for in 2023:

MYBENEFIT
ADVISOR

Healthcare...with heightened health concerns stemming from the pandemic and quests for enhanced personal well-being, a comprehensive portfolio of healthcare benefits has been and remains one of the most sought-after benefits.

Remote Work...the ability to work from home which became commonplace during the pandemic appears to have staying power. It remains to be seen whether the trend continues to grow or subsides to a lesser extent but for now this is something most employees are seeking.

Flexible Work Schedule...the ability to balance work responsibilities with personal obligations and the care of children and elderly parents has made a flexible work schedule a valued benefit in the post-pandemic world.

Paid Family Leave...Citing the positive benefits on physical health, mental well-being and stability for the entire family, workers are increasingly looking for companies that provide women with maternity leave and men with paternity leave.

Paid Time Off...employees continue to seek additional time off from work to reduce stress and recharge to maintain health and wellbeing. This actually has the potential to benefit employers in addition to the employee as the relaxation and clear mind attained through time off often leads to a higher level of employee morale and increased productivity.

The Greene County Chamber of Commerce offers its members access to My Benefit Advisor as a solution for employee benefits, including voluntary offerings. For more information about My Benefit Advisor, visit our website at greene.mybenefitadvisor.com or contact Mike Galardini at (800) 377-3539.
